Victims Commissioner

Overview: The Victims' Commissioner for England and Wales is dedicated to improving how the criminal justice system works for all victims and witnesses. The role of the Victims' Commissioner is to: raise awareness of the common issues faced by victims and witnesses, monitor how criminal justice and victim support agencies comply with the Victims' Code and Witness Charter, conduct detailed research and produce comprehensive reviews, use their independent voice to influence national policymaking and hold partner agencies to account and speak up about what works best for all victims and witnesses, and especially the most vulnerable. Every victim has a different experience of the criminal justice system. Your individual journey depends on the nature of the crime, the outcome of the police investigation and local differences in victim services. Please be aware that the Victims' Commissioner can't champion individual cases or challenge criminal justice agencies to make different decisions. However, they're there to listen if you're willing to tell them what went wrong. Your experience can help them campaign for better services for victims.

National Association for People Abused in Childhood (NAPAC)

Overview: NAPAC provide the only free national support service for adult survivors of all types of childhood abuse. They offer specialist, confidential support to all adult survivors of any type of abuse, operated by experienced staff and trained volunteers. NAPAC works closely with the criminal justice and public health sectors. They support survivors to navigate and understand their options with criminal and civil law, and in healing and recovery. Choice is key, and their website provides a lot of free information for survivors and those supporting them. People use NAPAC's services to support their overall health and wellbeing, to build and improve their resilience, and to be able to make brave, positive choices every day – including asking for help when they need it. Those using their services ask for support with a range of concerns, including anxiety, depression, isolation, reporting to the police, domestic and sexual violence, boundaries, and complex post-traumatic stress. For many, contacting NAPAC is a first step to recovering from trauma and leading happier, more fulfilled lives. They have four main services: running the UK's only free national telephone and email support service for all adult survivors of any kind of childhood abuse, intensive psycho-educational support groups for survivors of abuse; these face-to-face support groups have now been developed for online delivery, they provide extensive training for professionals who engage with adult survivors of childhood abuse and anyone at risk of vicarious trauma and they conduct research and advocacy, using their own data and working in partnership to raise survivors' voices in policy and practice across the UK. Stalking and Harassment Support

National Stalking Helpline

Overview: The National Stalking Helpline is run by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust and offers information and guidance to anybody in the UK who is currently or has previously been affected by harassment or stalking. They offer practical information, support, and advice on risk, safety planning and legislation to victims of stalking, their friends, family, and professionals working with victims. For individuals who don't feel comfortable contacting the helpline, the Am I Being Stalked? tool can also help in validating someone's experience, and support them in recognising the commonly misunderstood behaviours associated with this crime, such as unwanted gift giving, 'love bombing' after a relationship, messaging family, friends, workplaces, and other intrusive and distressing behaviours. They have worked in several counties to support victims of stalking – or those at heightened risk of being stalked, such as victims of domestic abuse – to stay safe. This has included delivering stalking awareness and personal safety workshops in refuges, distributing safety packs to victims of stalking, and training frontline professionals so that they are able to respond more effectively to victims of stalking who approach them.
